Warning: this game should be called Extreme Workout VR. Because that is exactly what it is. Geez, I only played 8 minutes and I'm already all sweaty and tired. You have to move quickly either to the left, right or middle. And you have to constantly squat down to avoid the obstacles (basically move to the opening in the wall, the rest of the wall being the obstacle). You're supposed to be collecting balls while doing the above. The coaster is just a big room scale area (get as much roomscale as you can) and that'll be where you can move to quickly avoid the obstacles. There's easy, normal, and hard levels. However, the only difference that I noticed was that you could press trigger more often to activate the slow motion ("bullet time") mode, where time slows down and you can more easily get to the correct spot. There's also a comfortable option and it just made your view smaller and things blurrier (IMO). Good thing I don't ever suffer from VR nausea. However, even on easy this game is quite the workout. So I don't recommend this game unless you're willing to play 2 minutes a a time or you are in good shape. And just forget about it you're completely out of shape.. This is a physical game where you get to move your body like spiderman does, so you really do need your roomscale! My right buttock hurts like hell after I lost my balance and fell backwards. Be careful!! :D BTW, motion sickness is pretty much guaranteed.. Overall the game is ok. I got it for $1 on sale but I would not pay $5 for it. also hitting the orbs is very buggy and the menu needs a bit of wok.. I was drawn in by the visuals, and I can confirm that the map itself is breathtaking in VR. The track however looks a little out of place and kind of breaks the aesthetics, but itu2019s not a huge issue as your senses will be pretty occupied with the obstacles ahead. Thanks to the power of VR you2019re in for a extreme ride. The platform you2019re standing on moves fast, and you have to move really quickly in all directions within your playspace in order not to smack into the walls ahead. Roomscale coaster is the game to play if want to improve your stamina and ducking abilities. Itu2019s simply an excellent workout game that might also give you an adrenalin rush. I played without the comfort option and didnu2019t feel any nausea, but then again I think my VR feet are pretty much fully grown by now.. Overall the game is ok. I got it for $1 on sale but I would not pay $5 for it. also hitting the orbs is very buggy and the menu needs a bit of wok.. If you want to make use of your room-scale and jump around dodging obstacles like a Ninja, this game is for you. I was falling over and still had a huge smile on my face. It's going to be my new favourite exercise game alongside Climbey VR. Definitely, definitely, worth the price.
